INDUSTRY HEADLINES // DECEMBER 5, 2013

Stones Throw, a California/American restaurant and bar situated in the heart of San Francisco in the renowned Russian Hill neighborhood, is pleased to announce Sunday brunch, now offered every Sunday between 11 a.m.–2 p.m.

“One of our team’s goals is to integrate fully into the neighborhood and become the gathering spot in Russian Hill for great food, drink and friendship,” says Ryan Cole, partner of Stones Throw, and acting general manager. “Brunch is that next step for us. We look forward to welcoming our friends, neighbors and all guests to enjoy a casual, homey Sunday brunch with us.”

Chef Halverson presents a seasonal, classic plated menu for brunch, including snacks, sweets and savory categories. Featured items include Duck Pate & Mousse with apple-ginger gelée and warm brioche; Brioche Pain Perdu with Pink Lady apples, candied walnuts, and bourbon caramel; and Soft Scrambled Chino Valley eggs with foraged mushrooms, spinach, and baguette.

The full bar menu, including cocktails, beer, and wine will be offered during brunch. The beer program features an extensive list with a balance between large-format, hard-to-find beers, and familiar namesakes. Four draft beers are offered, and craft beers from around the world offering a variety of flavor profiles will be emphasized. Categories include An Apple a Day, Thirst Quenchers, Funky Farmhouse, Smoke without Fire, Sour Patch, Bitter Beer Face, and Asking For Trouble.

The wine menu at Stones Throw is all about value, along with a careful balance of eclectic and adventurous wines, interspersed with familiar finds. Reading through the list will be half the fun as you choose between wines from the Left Coast, Organic & Biodynamic, Bizarrely Unique, Classically Trained, Crowd Pleasers, and Sense of Place categories.
